Stuart Horodner has been named Artistic Director and Stacie Lindner will be Managing Director of the Atlanta Contemporary Art Center. Executive Director Kay Kallos is relocating to Dallas, Texas.

The Atlanta Contemporary Art Center, celebrating 35 years as Atlanta's premier contemporary art venue, announces a new management team; Stuart Horodner and Stacie Lindner. Horodner, currently the Contemporary's Curator, and Lindner, Gallery Manager, will expand their roles to include fundraising, board and external relations, facilities and financial management and program and personnel oversight.

Executive Director, Kay Kallos will be relocating to Dallas in early July for personal reasons. She has been working closely with both Horodner and Lindner during her tenure and she is confident there will be a seamless transition to maintain the stability currently enjoyed by the organization. Kallos notes, "The strength of the Contemporary, witnessed by a 200% increase in attendance as well as significant new donor support in the last year, will be maintained by this team. I am confident that Stuart and Stacie are ready for new challenges at the Contemporary and I am pleased that they will take up the leadership of this outstanding organization and I wish them many years of great success."

The Atlanta Contemporary Art Center's Board President Baxter Jones states, "Stuart and Stacie will be a very strong team. They complement each other's skills effectively and have worked well as a part of the management structure at the Contemporary over the last year. Programs and exhibitions have witnessed record attendance and new program areas have been implemented to further the mission of the institution. I'm pleased about the prospect of working with them in their expanded roles."
